

C. I. A. Appoints Intelligence Deputy

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 15—

Ray S. Cline, former director of the United States Naval Auxiliary Communications Center in Taiwan, has been appointed deputy director for intelligence of the Central Intelligence Agency.

He succeeds Robert Amory Jr., who resigned recently to become chief of the Budget Bureau's international division.

Mr. Cline was born in Anderson Township, Ill., in 1918. He was elected to Phi Beta Kappa at Harvard, where he received his bachelor's, master's and doctor's degrees. He studied later at Balliol College, Oxford.

He entered government service in 1942 as a cryptanalyst, joined the Office of Strategic Services the following year and later served in the War Department.

Mr. Cline is married to the

Ray S. Cline

former Marjorie Wilson of Cambridge, Mass. They have two daughters.

CPYRGHT

CPYRGHT